LIVING HISTORY

ALTHORP HOUSE

A UNIQUE Family

Althorp was built in 1508, by the Spencers, for the Spencers, and that is how it has remained for over 500 years - the family line has contained politicians, courtiers, admirals, society beauties and pioneers in charity work, as well as gamblers, book lovers, and even a breeder of prize bulls. They were all related, but each Spencer was unique in time and taste.

Having one family in one home for five centuries has presented many opportunities for members of the line to leave behind their mark in the shape of their favourite acquisitions. A passion for collecting has always been present, and the cream of their collections now adorns Althorp. It is fair to say that the story of Althorp is also the story of the Spencers, and vice versa.

Althorp by John Vosterman 1677. This shows the original red brick, before it was tiled.

A family home to 19 generations of the Spencer family, Althorp showcases the various interests and passions of those who have lived here over the A UNIQUE HOME centuries. Charles, Ninth Earl Spencer has been in charge for just 20 of the House's 500-year history but he has striven in that time to make a positive difference, by taking an uncompromising approach to the continuing wellbeing of Althorp. This involves a fine balance between historical accuracy and practical modernity. Earl Spencer knows his job will never be complete overseeing the duty of running such a special place is an ever-evolving process.

From the captivating interiors to the beguiling grounds, Althorp offers a wealth of diversions for visitors of all ages. This is a house that continues to evolve: Althorp is a living organism, a part of our shared history, and, today, a simply gorgeous spot to spend a day being inspired.

ALTHORP

LIVING HISTORY

Althorp was built with classically aristocratic aims in mind - to demonstrate the wealth and power of the early Spencers, to show off their exquisite collections (of art, furniture, books, silver and porcelain), and to entertain.

But there was always an understanding that the owners of this great house had an obligation to share their good fortune with others. Distinguished visitors - kings, queens, foreign dignitaries - had only to ask, and the doors of this private palace were of course thrown open. But guests with less rarefied backgrounds could also ask to enjoy the contents - and a discreet tip placed in the hand of the head housekeeper would secure a tour, if the family's privacy was not unduly compromised.

These historic houses were dynamic places, full of bustle and industry ensuring the occupying family could lead pampered, smoothly-run, lives: even a little over a century ago, Althorp employed 65 permanent house staff, while another 45 worked in the gardens and Park, and a further 40 grooms attended the horses in the Stables. There was therefore less of a problem in absorbing a few extra people, curious to see the splendours within.

After the First World War there was a drastic belt-tightening in England's stately homes. It was hard to find staff, and estate incomes dipped while taxes rose. Between the wars, my grandfather (Jack - the 7th Earl Spencer) often welcomed visitors that shared his keen appreciation of the house and its chattels. His diaries show he was less thrilled by those who couldn't match his knowledge - he was almost comically scathing of what he perceived to be willful ignorance, when, in truth, he was asking way too much of his audience's intellect.

My father, by contrast, just adored people. He chatted happily with all comers to Althorp, as at ease with a prince as with a primary school teacher. He was modern in his outlook - sharing Althorp with enormous generosity, and without snobbery.

I've had the privilege of being in charge of Althorp, for quarter of a century now. I've certainly received some interesting guests - including former presidents Mandela and Gorbachev - and, through the annual Althorp Literary Festival, a never-ending stream of internationally acclaimed figures: novelists, sportsmen, comedians, politicians, and experts in dozens of fields.

But the high points of our year are those weekends when we fill Althorp with family and friends, as the 18 preceding generations of my family have done for 500 years. The original builder and occupant of Althorp - Sir John Spencer - left it as a condition of his Will that Althorp should always be a place of entertainment. It's not a tough duty to fulfill - whether with loved ones, or interested outsiders. It was never designed to be a place to hide away in - it was painted on the broadest possible canvas, as something spectacular that demanded widespread admiration and appreciation.

CHARLES SPENCER

"Althorp is the essence of Englishness"

THE 9TH EARL SPENCER

Watch Charles, 9th Earl Spencer introduce a new Althorp Living History furniture collection. Each piece has been curated to reflect the history and taste of Althorp, one of England's finest country houses.

For five centuries, Althorp - a sprawling English estate in bucolic Northamptonshire - has served as the primary residence of the Spencers, one of the most distinguished, aristocratic families in England with ties to Winston Spencer Churchill and the ancestors of George Washington. In April 1992, Charles, Viscount Althorp, became the 9th Earl Spencer and it was he who worked with TA to bring the Althorp Living History Collection to fruition. The resulting collection of furniture and upholstery pieces in Althorp Living History draws inspiration from treasures gathered during the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries by Althorp's famous inhabitants.

"Althorp is to me the essence of Englishness... Understated but impressive, traditional but relevant, a historic house but also a warm and much loved home. Its contents have been assembled with discernment, over 500 years. If I had to sum up Althorp - itself the embodiment of the Spencer family's heritage - in one word, it would be English."

As you walk round this house, you will see the accumulation of paintings, furniture, china, and sculpture, which have appealed to the tastes of my family over the generations. I hope that, beyond the art, you will also notice that Althorp is very much a home. I believe this is down to the fact that one family has used this house as a home, in an unbroken line," states Lord Spencer.

THEODORE ALEXANDER

THE Saloon

The Saloon was formed with the roofing-over of the inner courtyard of the Elizabethan house, by Dorothy, widow of the First Earl of Sunderland, in circa 1662. She was also responsible for the installation of the imposing staircase. Although of simple construction, it is without compare for its size and age. Pevsner refers to its 'unique monumentality'. An earlier guest, Count Lorenzo Magolotti praised it in 1661 for being 'constructed with great magnificence'. Made of oak, it had at first been stained to resemble walnut. Holland had it painted white, when he added the gallery balustrades, but the wood was stripped back at the turn of this century. The stairs are covered in a carpet bought by the Fourth Earl Spencer, from Smyrna (modern Ishmir).

The present layout dates from the end of the last century, the area enlarged and the fireplace put in. MacVicar Anderson, the architect in charge, also fashioned the existing coving to reflect that in the Wootton Hall.

Clustered over the fireplace are pictures of various Spencer-Churchills, and the First Duke of Marlborough. Directly above the mantelpiece is the Honourable John Spencer, grandson and heir of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough by George Knapton, surveyor of pictures to George III. The Third Earl Spencer is by George Hayter.

Of recent generations, the ever-immaculate Sixth Earl is shown as captured by Sir William Orpen: and the Seventh Earl is seen in an uncomfortable portrait by Augustus John.

On the ground floor are ranged portraits of Queen Anne and her husband, George of Denmark, and courtiers and statesmen by various English and continental masters, including Sir Godfrey Kneller, Wissing and Jean-Baptiste Van Loo.

Among the display items is the clock at the top of the staircase. In a Boulle and ormolu case, this Louis XIV piece arrived through Georgiana, first wife of the Fourth Earl, her inheritance owed something to luck, however. She was a co-heiress to her father, William S. Poyntz, while her mother, Elizabeth Browne, was sole heiress in turn to Viscount Montagu of Cowdray. The clock came from Cowdray, and was valued at £10 when it came to Althorp in 1840.

The chimneypiece was brought in 1926 from the dining room at Spencer House. Downstairs, also on the south side, are various medals and decorations awarded to family members during generations of public service.

L I V I N G H I S T O R Y

The histories of the Spencer Family's Heritage and Althorp are so tightly entwined that they would be impossible to unravel and separate. These Spencer ancestors were able to indulge their tastes – to commission art, furniture, and all the finer things in life. You can see the Spencer touch in every corner of Althorp – this historic house that my family has called “home” for over 500 years, and which for the past decade, has been given unprecedented care and attention.

THE PAINTERS Passage

Part of Henry Holland's 1788 enlargement enclosed the existing outside wall and allowed direct access to the South Drawing Room. In Edwardian times, the corridor was called 'the Painters' Passage', and Lord Spencer has returned this corridor to the décor of his grandfather's time and given it its previous name.

The Roman Emperors' busts have been retrieved from the attics and the marble busts from throughout the house have been brought to this one site. There are two busts of definitive likeness: a marble one of Charles Le Brun, Premier Peintre du Roi to Louis XIV, by Antoine Coysevox and Van Dyck, by John Michael Rysbrack.

A bust of Earl Godolphin commissioned by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough by Rysbrack, was rescued from the fire at Wimbledon Park in 1785 - although its companion, a bust of Duke of Marlborough, did not survive.

Rysbrack, many of whose works are in Westminster Abbey, was described by Horace Walpole, a frequent visitor, as 'the greatest master seen in these islands since Le Sueur' - a judgement history has confirmed. A sculpture of "The Innocent" being carried to Heaven by Joseph Nollenkens, was commissioned by Lord Spencer in Rome in 1764, and is believed to have been displayed in the Painted room at Spencer house.

The collection of paintings, many of them self-portraits by artists of Dutch, Italian and English studios, were inherited through Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and originally hung in her Wimbledon manor.

Either side of the door the South Drawing Room is a wind clock with weather vane, attached to an outside vane linked mechanically to the roof. These were installed probably at the time of Holland's alterations.

THE PICTURE Gallery

The Picture Gallery remains very much as it was created by Robert Spencer, 2nd Earl of Sunderland (1641-1702). Educated at Oxford, he traveled extensively on the 'Grand Tour' in France, Italy and Spain and afterwards followed an active diplomatic career with appointments to Madrid (1671), Paris (1672), Cologne (1673), The Hague (1678). With both discernment and the opportunity for acquiring pictures on the continent, he was the first member of the Spencer family to collect paintings. Many of the fine scalloped frames in the gallery which he had made in either Italy or Spain, particularly those round the Lely portraits, are known as 'Sunderlands'. The Picture Gallery is based on the original Elizabethan gallery in the south-west wing of the house. It is 115 feet long, 20 feet wide and 19 feet high. On entering, to the left are a series of portraits of the beauties of Charles II's court painted and signed by Sir Peter Lely.

At the south end and focal point of the gallery, is Van Dyck's (1599-1641) famous whole-length double portrait (c.1637 known as War and Peace, representing the brothers-in-law George Digby, Second Earl of Bristol, and William Russell, First Duke of Bedford.

THE WOOTTON Hall

The striking Palladian hall you first enter incorporates a series of country scenes by the English artist John Wootton [c. 1682-1764] – which lends the hall its name. Wootton's fame rests as the specialist English sporting painter of his day. Among other commissions, he executed similar designs for the Great Hall at Longleat.

He would not have painted in situ, but in a studio in London, having taken measurements of the spaces that needed to be filled. They were painted as part of the scheme ordered by the Fifth Earl of Sunderland, who, like his brother and heir at Althorp, was a passionate fox-hunter. The life-size studies of the Earl's favourite mounts face the visitor on entering. The canvases running the length of sides, show Lord Spencer and his friends riding with the Althorp and Pytchley hounds with the riders individually identified. The ruins of nearby Holdenby Castle, the core of which still survives today, further identify the scenes. The details of the hall's construction are not fully recorded, but it is probably by Colin Campbell, though he died in 1729 before the work was undertaken. Roger Morris completed the commission in 1733.

For many tastes the hall's proportions make it the most satisfying room in the house, with a cool dignity, appropriately lit. Pevsner calls it 'the noblest Georgian room in the county'. The airiness comes from the high ceiling which rises almost to the height of the house. Its deeply coffered coving bears an octagonal design, with eagles on the corner buttresses. Beneath there is a frieze alternating plaster fox heads with hounds.

THE SOUTH Drawing Room

The South Drawing room was for a hundred years a dining room and now serves as a reception room. It contains some splendidly ornate and important furniture, much of it French, acquired by the First Earl Spencer for Spencer House in London.

In this room are an outstanding collection of portrait paintings, predominately by Sir Joshua Reynolds. Amongst these is a portrait, painted in 1786, of John Charles, Viscount Althorp.

He became the Third Earl Spencer, co-founder of the Royal Agricultural Society, and he was also a great politician. He was the Chancellor of the Exchequer and helped put through the Reform Bill. He had no heir, losing his wife in childbirth.

This was one of the first rooms to be redecorated by Earl Spencer after he inherited Althorp in 1992.

THE INDIA SILK Bedroom

This bedroom is tucked away in a peaceful corner of the house with beautiful views of the gardens below. It is popular with house guests as it is part of a suite with its own dressingroom and bathroom.

The name of the bedroom comes from the silk bedspread that has traditionally been used here. The bed was made in 1923 using posts from circa 1760, found in the brew house.

The paintings are nearly all landscapes, which are hung in Sunderland frames designed by Robert Spencer, Earl of Sunderland, in the early 17th century. Most of the pictures are from the Anglo - Dutch school of the late 17th century.
